Each year the Division of Energy and Mineral Development offers Tribes an opportunity to participate in a grant program for energy and mineral assessment projects. The grant program, called the Energy and Mineral Development Program (EMDP), is an annual program, subject to appropriations, designed to financially assist Tribes and Indian allottees in evaluating their energy and mineral resource potential beneath their lands. DEMD solicits proposals from Tribes, and through a competitive review system selects qualified projects for funding. DEMD staff monitors the projects to ensure the best possible product is obtained for the funds allocated.

The EMDP grant program differs from essentially all other funding agencies' grant programs. The primary difference is the hands-on approach employed by DEMD staff serving as technical consulting partners to the Tribes receiving the grant. This approach includes providing funds and technical assistance to Tribes in evaluating their energy and mineral resource potential; providing Tribes with geological, geophysical, and engineering reports, maps, and other data concerning their energy and mineral resources;

providing Tribes with technical assistance on using and interpreting assessment information so that Tribes understand their resource potential and can plan for the potential development of these resources; providing Tribes with an outreach vehicle to promote their lands and resources; and perhaps most significantly, providing direct assistance to Tribes in negotiating complex, value added agreements with potential partners or investors.
